VANCOUVER (CP) - When the offset presses of the Van-couver Times began to turn on Saturday, their roar echoed a thunder nearly 100 years old.

The Times is the latest publication to enter the lively, brassy world of the Vancouver newspaper business, a way of life born across the harbor in an old mill on July 20, 1878.

The first newspaper in the area was the Moodyville Tickler, published by William Royde Colbeck, a 26-year-old

With the campaign less than a week old, most experts probably would pick the late president's brother as the favorite, but would not be surprised if Keating should win.

Passions will run high in this campaign, and intricate cross currents already at work will alter voting patterns of Many Democrats will vote for Keating. Many Republicans will refuse to vote for Keating. principally because he has refused to support Sen. Barry Goldwater for president.

with resentment, that the former attorney general's entry into the New York race is merely another way of saybe looked after.

A number of Democrats believe that their party has long been sick in New York because of boss rule by Rep. Charles others like him. To save themselves from being buried under the reform movement these hosses have latched onto the Kennedy candidacy.

Thus a number of so-called reform Democrats resent the Kennedy candidacy even though some of them reluctantly voted for him in the state convention last week.

Many Democrats admire Keating, have voted for him in the past and believe he showed courage and good sense in refusing to support Goldwater's brand of Republicanism. Kating's moderate - liberal record in the House and Senate over the last 18 years makes it possible for Democrats to vote for him without freling uncomfortoble. Conversely, there are Republicans who believe that Keating showed himself weak-kneed and disloyal by not coming out for Goldwater. Furthermore, the ultra-right wing Republicans, now politically domiciled in New York's conservative party, are out for Keating's scalp. They had hoper to nominate Mrs. Clare Booth Luce for the Senate. When she withdrew from the picture under heavy Republican pressure, the conservatives nominated a littleknown political scientist named Henry Paolucci.

He is not expected to poll as large a vote as Mrs. Luce would have. However, professionals on Keating's staff believe that from 150,000 to 200,000 conservative voters may vote for Paolucci.

* * * If the election should prove very close, the conservatives could throw it to Kennedy by holding these votes out of the Keating column.

The Requblicans are pinning their early hopes of beating Kennedy on the carpetbagger issue. To the extent that this issue involves resentment against Kennedy for grabbing a hase of power in New York when no other was available, this will remain a formidable

But where the issue simply involves the wisdom of voting for a man who is from another state, the steam will probably go out of it after a few weeks.

There was some truth to Mayor Robert F, Wagner's statement that New York is in effect a national state.

Personal sympathies are bound to play an important part in the outcome. Many will vote for Keating because they feel borry for him in his encounter with the Kennedy juggernaut.

Many others will vote for Kennedy - because they feel sorry about what happened in Dallas last Nov. 22.

Kennedy brings a combination of youth and energy to wage the kind of campaign that Keating, who is 61, will be hard put to match for sheer endur-

Word of Warning

CONSIDERABLE satisfaction will be felt across Canada that after many years of struggling the national budget is not only balancing but is showing an appreciable surplus. The finance minister's latest figures indicate that the surplus for the first four months of the current fiscal year is $439,600,000, eight times larger than the surplus of $52,000,000 at this time a year ago. The reason is not to be found in holdline on expenses, but on greatly increased revenues forthcoming from a booming economy.

Personal, corporation and sales taxes are all higher than anticipated, and the outlook for a con-tinuation of this boost of the national revenues appears fairly good.

At the same time it is to be noted that although the cash flow situation is good, the national debt is still mounting. From $18,037,200,000 at the end of August 1963 it has grown to $18,618,700,000, which more than swallows up the current budgetary surplus.

This point should be carefully stressed for all those politicians who see in the present prosperity an excuse for plunging the country into new social ventures based on the current excess of revenues over

It will be something entirely new if the present boom manages to carry on indefinitely. Historically, or traditionally, there will be recessions and perhaps even depressions ahead. When these happen revenues may once again be lower than expenditures.

There is nothing pessimistic about these statements. They are merely issued as words of warning that when medicare, pension and other social schemes are before the House, they should be made to stand on their own feet, and not on any hypothetical assumption that the high noon of 1964 finances can be maintained indefinitely.

Law Breakers

WHEN A LAW is broken by a great number of W people, and when its enforcement becomes nightimpossible, it is probable the law is not a good one and is in need of revision.

Canada's legislation making it illegal for anyone to dispense information and means of practising birth control is a case in point. Doctors, drug stores, welfare and social agencies are infringing this law every day, and birth control in one shape or another is probably practised by most married couples at some time or other in their period of fecundity.

Even the Roman Catholics, who are opposed completely to artificial birth control, permit use of the

The executive council of the Canadian Anglican Church at its meeting during the week has unani-mously accepted the view that the present birth control legislation is "antiquarian, hypocritical, ineffective and harmful," and has urged Parliament to amend the Criminal Code pertinent to this matter.

Bishop H. R. Hunt, of Toronto, leading the church's case for a change, very rightly said the harm caused by the act was that it was being widely broken, thus "promoting disrespect for law."

There are a number of other antiquated pieces of legislation which like the one on birth control could be amended advantageously. Some traffic code regulations must come into this category for many of these are virtually impossible of enforcement or are of such a technical nature that no traffic authority would want to lay charges on them.

e old saving that laws are made only to broken, does not mean they should remain laws when they are broken by too many persons, and when the breakers, like the tellers of "white lies," regard themselves as being morally, if not legally, in the right,

Lost Years

TIME AND THE WORLD have passed by at least two Japanese soldiers still hiding out in the jungle of Guam, in an area where a last stand was made before U.S. forces relieved that Pacific Island nineteen years ago. They have been seen but never flushed out.

Perhaps they are unaware the war ended long ago, or are fearful to give themselves up. How they have lived only they themselves know. But probably they can be praised for their fidelity, hanging on to a cause long lost even if they are unaware of it.

They will not know that the world is now different, that their country has undergone evolution and that an enemy is now their friend. Are they soared ever to return to it, the adjustment they will find amazing, not having shared the gradual transformation of the Japanese scene.

More importantly they have lost perhaps a third of their years in the ignorance that must be theirs and which keeps them in hiding.

And the irony is they don't know they could give themselves up without fear, their war being a thing of the past and amnesty awaiting them.

The Saunterers

TT IS CUSTOMARY at this time of year to remind motorists that children are going back to school and the driving habits of the summer have to be changed. The school zones become important again; the danger of speeding or passing in them becomes acute, and not only that: excited and pre-occupied youngsters on their way to or from their first classes of the term are apt to appear from nowhere in unexpected places. It is a time for extreme caution.

Perhaps not very many drivers need such reminders. Parents-even fathers-will be fully aware that their offspring are off to school once more.

There is another side to the matter though that needs some attention.

We have no doubt that at school and at home, most children are warned and warned again of the need to be careful on the streets. In some young heads, however, the notion seems to grow—especially at the secondary level—that the pedestrian being supreme in law at crosswalks is supreme in every way. A few youngsters but too many arrogantly saunter across the road as if traffic didn't exist.

The lesson this minority needs to learn, and that ought to be pressed home at this season, is that a frustrated and irritated driver is seldom as efficient as he might be. Consideration for others, by pedestrians and motorists alike, is a most important ingredient of safety.

Not so pretty; I vow. If a poll were taken I suppose red would be the most popular color of all. Milady loves it, for example, and she is a good judge. When it comes to pigmentation she is away out in front. The aesthetics are her prized prerogative.

It will be this doubtless that has induced the carmined cheeks, those bereft of the tinge nature puts on the human visage in lands wherein fresh air, indoors, is not frowned upon. You may observe this among newcomers from such places when first they come to Victoria. Their cheeks glow.

No one can complain here that a fresh breeze is not available, but it is not universally acclaimed.

Why should it be, when milady can supply her own coloration from a little metal case. And, it must be conceded, oft with more delicate touch than nature itself can contrive. Milady knows her stuff.

In a way I do too, I suppose, for I am fond of red ties. I have a dozen of them, ranging in atholic order among the varieties to which "red" is assigned by human color evolution. Certain persons" are capitulationists. "Certain persons" is a Chinese phrase meaning Khrushchev. He strayed from the rule book

When the Chinese say this, the Russians say they are attacking the "monolithic character and inviolable indestructibility of the socialist camp."

Now, what is peace? To answer this, you must first define people.

Back in 1957, when the argument was warming up, Mao Tse-tung said "imperialists and their myrmidons" anywhere are not people. Those opposing them says Mao, "belong in the category of the people." ** * *

Inside a Communist country, those who co-operate with the party can be called people, but they aren't really. Unless they are in the party, they're part of the "simple or the "broad masses," who are led by the representatives of the people. Those who do not take kindly to this are "trying to wreck socialist construction," and are enemies of the people.

In general, when the word 'people' comes up, you're safe if you substitute the word * * *

Khrushchev says there can't be contradictions in U.S.S.R. because the U.S.S.R., being classless, is an 'all-people state," which means all Soviet people are people except hooligans, emswindlers, speculators and other riff raff who are "remnants of decadent capitalism.

If you're a good Communist, peace can't come until all imperialists are gone. A Communist can work for peace and make compromises, but the way, ignore it. The Chisuch compromises must not nese call this Khrushchevism. damage the fundamental interests of the people." People are Communists. Thus, peace is communism.

That brings up peaceful coexistence. Both the Chinese and the Russians are for peaceful coexistence, which is sought by all peace-loving countries. The only peace-loving countries are Communist countries.

The Russians say peaceful co-existence "is the most important form of struggle against imperialism." It does not mean peaceful coexistence with capitalism because "the Communist party of the Soviet Union is resolutely against peaceful coexistence in the ideological sphere."

Peaceful coexistence means: 'Don't interfere with what we are trying to do to you and there won't be any shooting.'

The Port Moody Gazette was next on the scene, appearing in 1883 with a no-nonsense approach that listed subscription rates at $2 per annum — "invariably in advance." It lasted four years. In 1886 the Vancouver Weekly Herald and North Pacific News bowed in, published on a hand press brought from Toronto. Later the same year the Vancouver Advertiser and the Vancouver News began

Hit by Fire

All three were wiped out on Sunday, June 13, 1886, when fire swept the city. On the Monday, publisher

James H. Ross of the News went to Victoria and bought another printing plant. He re-turned on Tuesday and on Wednesday — using borrowed facilities produced the story of the fire which had halted his press on the Sunday.

The Herald and the Adpertiser resumed publication noon afterward.

In 1887 Francis L. Carter-Cotton and R. W. Gordon bought the News and the Advertiser and combined them to a daily. For 30 years the Daily News - Advertiser was to be a power in Canadian reporting of politics that It won the nickname "Hansard of British Columbia."

Denver Driver Scores

By IAN SMITH

Jim Malloy of Denver won the first heat of the Daffodil Cup modified sportsmen racing classic at Western Speedway last night to take a stranglehold on the Canadian-American Modified Racing Association driver championship.

If Malloy wins the second heat Monday, he will spoil Billy Foster's bid to win the championship two years in B row.

COSTLY COLLISION

By Tuesday morning maning is dead, and it is the same thing Wednesdays.

Commercial notices so far have been allowed three days and nights each week in Juan de Fuca Strait. Tuesday night and before daylight Wednesday is the last of the week's fishing for the gillnetters, who mostly fish by night. Seisers finish up at 6 p.m. Wednesday.

These times can be changed at a moment's notice, but the three-day netting has been the general pattern in the past few

Wednesday morning for several hours there is just one steady stream of gilinetters in Juan de Fron Streit, heads home . . . for Victoria, for Vancouver, for Steveston. It make for difficult fishing for the sportsmen and putters, becau they have to be continually getting out of the way of speeding

But, there aren't many fish about on Wednesdays anyway. What haven't been scooped up by the nets are stragglers from schools that have been broken up by the nets.

By Thursday morning the salmon, undisturbed by nets, are starting to school up again. Trollers seem to catch more of them. By Friday fishing off Sooke, Secretary Island and Becher Bay can be pretty good. It gets better Saturday and better still on Sunday. It should be good off Esquimalt this weekend for the Esquimait Anglers' Association annual Cerebral Palsy derby.

Then the nets come back and fishing falls off again,

Those are our observations while vacationing at Gordon Beach, six miles beyond Sooke, where we have been observing the net fishing first hand.

Everybody along the beach is catching some fish but it has been nothing like inst year, when we had that terrific run of pinks, and nothing like it used to be when the traps were in and the big net-fishing fleet was not operating at the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait and all the way down to Scoke.

Paskaged but will work but frush but has proven out much better. We spent the first couple of days trying spoons but didn't start having any success until Ira Erb called over Monday and dumped a tin of fresh minnows in our boat.

Then came the netters and fishing dropped aff. It picked up a bit Thursday and on Friday, belped along by another tin of fresh minnows, brought this time by Frank and Jo Frost, we were able to score again. We used a light green octopus, which is similar to a hootchie-kootchie, over a fresh minnow wired to a single hook with eight ounces of weight and 40 feet of line between the weight and rod tip.

Canadian visitors to Britain too often overlook two out-ofthe-way and intriguing centres of interest-Channel Islands and the Isle of Scilly.

The chief attractions of the Islands are the scenery and the fields of narcissi, lilies and daffodils which, because of the mildness of the climate, are in flower from Christmas until May. In fact, almost all of the early spring flowers sold in London come from the Isles of Scilly.

The Channel Islands, located some 100 miles south of English coast and about 20 miles from the Cherbourg ila in France, consist of lersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Herm and are all that remain of the English possessions in France that

Muddy Hens Disgrace Relatives

By MAUREEN DUFFUS

There's a thing that's bothering me about one of the exhibits at the Saanich fair. You know that poultry exhibit with all those handsome birds? Can anyone tell me how they keep so

I've got some poultry of my own in fact I even have some relatives of one of the first prize winners. But I just know that those holty-talty birds in the winners cage would disown their poor relations if they ever chanced to meet.

Take hen-pecked Henry, for instance. He's a black and white spangled Hamburg and a lovely great rooster he was, too, before he took to slumming.

Actually, he's the only bird of

Theatre Arts Ball

History will be in the making on the night of Friday, Sept. 25.

Victoria's first Theatre Arts Ball, sponsored by the Bastion Theatre Studio, will be held in the Crystal Garden on that evening.

Dress will be optional, either masquerade or black tie.

A Vancouver group led by David Hughes will provide special entertainment and Geoff Venables' Orchestra will play for dancing.

Proceeds will go to support the Children's Theatre program.

Arranged by Dorothy Wrotnowski Social Editor Photos by Kinsman

Players Club members, Gordon Armstrong, left, as the Decree vendor in The Birds, and Mrs. Dorothea House as Mistress Quigley in the Merry Wives of Windsor. Invitations have been issued to major theatre centres in Canada and to all performing arts groups in Victoria to send displays publicizing their plans for the season and to be used as part of the decor for the ball.

A Colonist FIRST!

"Famous Letters in Canadian History"

A series of 30 articles to be published daily, exclusively in the Colonist, each one consisting of a reproduction of an actual letter written by a leader in Canadian life since the early days of French rule.

Read General Wolfe's order to attack at Quebec-the order that was to change a continent's history! Read about Sir John A. Macdonald's concern over hostile Indians in the West; Sir Wiffred Laurier's letter of resignation in 1911 . . . and many more in this great Canadian series of daily articles. The letters, which are old and indistinct, are reproduced photostatically and also in type.

Of particular interest to students and history teachers, the excitement, suspense and high drama of a country in the making the series contains, will appeal to all Colonist readers. Produced in co-operation with the Public Archives of Canada, it is the first time such a collection has been at every opportunity. c. Club six. At first sight this may seem a genuine "blind lead," but in fact the club has a slight edge over the diamond. Partner did not double five diamonds, so, in the absence of any other CQ6 clue, it is more likely that he holds the remaining unbid suit. d. Heart eight, A classic situation for a trump lead. South is strong in East's first-bid suit, and North probably guards diamonds. The trap lies in the choice of card; the jack or ten cannot gain and can cost a trick if North has a lone honor. For example, if dummy has king-fourth and North has the singleton queen declarer will win the opening lead with the ace and finesse the nine. e. Diamond nine, Obviously, South wants to hit partner's suit. Many players would argue that North is likely to have spades because the opponents have not bid them; but it is even more likely that North yould have bid spades if he had them. We think North f. Spade five. Although East has a spade suit, this lead gives the best chance to beat the contract, but

Manitoba

The strike of 1,600 workers at the International Nickel Company plant at Thompson, in northern Manitoba, is developing into the most costly in the history of the United Steelworkers of America.

So says Brian Koshul, chairman of the workers' negotiating committee. He was speaking at the time of distribution of strikers' youchers, $12 a week for unmarried men and $16 for married, with an extra $4 per child up to a limit of four. The union is also paying all members' hos group insurance premiums.

About 218,000 Manitoba students returned Tuesday to schools staffed by 8,600 teachers as the costliest school year in the province's history opened. A department of education official in Winnipeg said this year's program will cost $70,-000,000, about $2,000,000 more than last year.

Moths in the Lawn

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

MOTHS IN THE LAWN (H.G.L. Victoria) -1 wouldn't worry about just an occasional single moth in the lawn, but if the growth is thin and poor in spite of fertilizer and water, and if many small light brown moths rise up and flutter away as you walk across it in the dusk, you can be prefty sure the roots are being chewed up by the moth's grubs.

An effective treatment for lawn moth is chlordane emulsion. Water the lawn very thoroughly and deeply first, for the chemical penetrates better in damp soil. Mix the chlordane in water at the rate of one tablespoonful per gallon and apply with a watering can, at least one quart of the solution per square yard.

ROSE VARIETIES (V.S., Colweed) ... I think you are confusing the rose Sterling Silver with Silver Lining; they are quite different, both in color and in habit of growth.

Sterling Silver is an unusual shade, a silvery lilac-mauve color, and well shaped blooms borne on bushes rather more upright in growth than most roses. It is fragrant, but more than usually susceptible to mildew with exquisitely formed blooms in a rich pink shade and making an exceptionally vigorous bush. This is one of the very few roses ever to win an award on the basis of scent alone, receiving the Clay Cup in 1957 for the most fragrant rose of the year. Incidentally, there are 100 bushes of Silver Lining growing in the gardens of Buckingham Palace, presented to Her Majesty the Queen by the raiser, Alex Dickson of Northern Ireland. to commemorate the birth of Prince

PEONY PLANTING (J.L. Crofton)-The best time to dig up. divide and replant peony roots is around the end of September. This is also the best time of the year to buy-and plant new peony roots.

The site for peonies should be dugover deeply and enriched with old rotted manure, so old as to be almost unrecognizable as manure. Dig this in widely -don't just dump a shovelful in the bottom of the planting hole. Plant with the top of the peony root just two inches deep; peonies set in the ground too deeply will not bloom.

GERANIUM SLIPS (R.G.M., Victoria) Geranium slips can be taken and rooted at any time of the year, with some slight preference for August and September. Use the tip of the plant or the tips of branches, four or five inches long, making your cut immediately below a leaf joint. Use a very sharp knife, or better still, an old razor blade, as crushed or bruised tissues are rejuctant to make roots. Remove the lower leaves from the

Even with an easy rooter like the geranium. I think it pays to use one of the hormone rooting powders such as Rootone, Stim-Root or Seradix. Moisten the cut end of the slip, dip it in the rooting powder, shake off any excess dust, and insert the slip inthe rooting medium.

This may be any one of a number of materials sand, peat moss, vermiculite or perlite, or any combination of these; I like equal parts perlite and peat moss, packed firmly into a clay flower pot. Never use ordinary soil as it tends to rot the slips, and I don't care too much for the type of roots you get when slips are rooted in water. Whatever material you use, keep it barely moist, never soggy wet. Slips should be inserted around the outer edge of the clay pot, about two inches deep. When rooted and growing, repot individ-ually into pots of sandy loam soil.

The Little World of SHEILAH GRAHAM

Liz Taylor Keeps Busy

HOLLYWOOD (NANA)-Montgomery Clift has not made a film since Freud two years ago, but he has good news from his good friend Elizabeth Taylor. I learn from Monty's associates in New York that he will star with Elizabeth in The Owl and the Pussyoat. They will make it in Ireland by the end of this year, while Elchard Burton is starring in The Spy Who Came In From The Cold, also in a Dublin studio. Liz will be playing a high class prostitute who is somewhat off her rocker, and this kind of role is more within her acting range than, let's say, Cleopatra. Elizabeth can be a very good friend. When she was going to star in the Tennessee Williams story, This Property is Condemned, she made a condition, that Monty would star with her. This perhaps is why Natalle Weed is playing the part instead. Anyway, she made the same condition for The Owl and the Pussyout and succeeded in persuading the producers that Monty will be a good owl and a good boy. He has always been a good actor . . . And this is the week when all the details will be smoothed away for La Taylor to sign for the movie version of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?

The Eike Sommer-Joe Hyams marriage is closer than we realized. When Joe arrives in Yugoslavia where Elke is making a movie, he'll bring the quickie divorce decree he dashed to Mexico to get, soon after his California decree from Eille, the mother of his three children. Joe paid a lot for his freedom, but he'll be earning lots more what with his biography of wisard designer Edith Head, and his forthcoming ghosting of the Elta Hayworth story, which should be very interesting. Rita can use her share of the money. Her daughter, Princess Yasmin Khan is rich, but Rita is not. Neither is Rebecce, her daughter from the marriage with Orson Wells.

Leslie Caron had to send her young children back to England, ahead of her own arrival there when she finishes The Favor with Bock Hudson. It's not further trouble with Peter Hall, who is divorcing her and naming Warren Beatty as co-respondent. It's just that school over there is starting sooner than expected. Leale and Warren are always together at the various restaurants and functions. If they are both willing they could be man and wife before the new year. The question is, are they both willing?

Ed Wyss beamed at the Mary Poppins premiere when his appearance in the picture caused a storm of applause. And he is still smiling with the news that there will be a fourth generation Wynn to carry on the family acting tradition. Keenan's son Tracy has entered Grenoble University in France to study drama. The acting dynasty was begun by Keenan's grandfather, Frank Ke

'Tis my considered opinion that Anthony Quinn was Gregory Peck, cost $4.500,000. I doubt whether Teny's performance will help recoup the cost. He is now starring in London. While on location in Jamaica, Tony, his two baby sons and their mother Yolanda lived in a fabulous 10-room villa called Fort Point, on a magnificent premon-tory overlooking Discovery Bay, where the island's discoverer, Christopher Celumbus landed on his second voyage to the new world in 1494.

Crisis Near Last-Chance Stage

OTTAWA (CP) - In the view of many MPs in all parties, the deadlocked flag debate has entered a new crisis

This stage is being described as the last chance to find a solution before a general election becomes inevitable And all parties say they don't want another election now, that if one comes over the flag Canada will be divided for generations

The party leaders, including Prime Minister Pearson and Opposition Leader Diefenbaker, are agreed in principle that a committee of MPs is the way

But they haven't yet ironed out the degree of unanimity necessary for such design to be presented to the Commons with a good chance of winning approval.

Riots, Invaders Malaysia Steps Up War Alert

KUALA LUMPUR (AP) - The king proclaimed all Malaysia a security area Saturday to combat Indonesian invader bands and to halt race rioting in Singapore believed fomented by Indonesian agitators.

The sweeping powers to impose curfews, ban assembly and control the movement of citizens went further than Friday's state of emergency, which provided for quick trials and death penalties for anyone found carrying arms.

The king, the Raja of Perlis, acted as new rioting between Chinese and Malays in Singapore forced police to use tear gas to halt a rampage that left three cars in flames. The riot ers took advantage of a lifting of the curfew to permit people to buy food. A 54 - year - old woman was beaten to death when she went to a market.

Whose were the Bodies in Skeleton Cave?

Between Kyuquot and Cape Cook on the west coast of Vancouver Island, about 14 miles southwest of Quatsino, is secluded Raft Cove. Accessible only in favorable weather at high tide or by hiking overland through dense wilderness, the inlet has few visitors... It is here that is found the key to an intriguing mystery: the mystery of the Skeleton Cave.

In his article "Skeletons of Cape Scott," (The Islander, March 20, 1964) Cecil Clark wrote that Quatsino pioneers Thomas Istad and Philip Nordstrøm stumbled upon the limestone cavern while trailing a wounded cougar. Inside the surprised hunters found the mud floor littered with human bones!

After examining the skeletons by the light of a small fire, Hatad estimated them to be the remains of about 35 persons—men, women and children.

Another observation was even more startling—the skeletons were not Indian!

Ilstad noticed that the skulls did not resemble those of Indians, and that the teeth were not ground flat through the abrasion of sand in food, as was common with aboriginal remains. The fact that the bones were encrusted with lime-stone crystals indicated that they had been there many years.

The men took four skulls home and showed them to achool teacher Carl Christensen. Christensen immediately sent one of the skulls to arithropologist and Indian expert Dr. C. F. Newcombe. According to newspaper reports, the late Dr. Newcombe determined that the skull was that of a male Caucasian, about 19 or 20 years old, who succumbed from a blow on the head, possibly made by an axe!

or 20 years old, who succumbed from a blow on the head, possibly made by an axe! Ilstad also learned that prior to his and Nordstrom's discovery of the cave, neither local Indians nor whites knew of its existence.

Nearly 60 years have passed since the finding of the cave in 1905, yet nothing more has been learned about the origin or identity of its unfortunate inhabitants. Just to the south is the wicked coast known as the Graveyard of the Pacific, but no records of its countless marine tragedies shed light on the cave.

Son's Story

Guy Ilstad of Quatsino, son of the cave's co-discoverer, Thomas, anid "... the skeletons are still in the cave. I think there can be little doubt that if they were whites, it was the work of Indians, who murdered some ship-wrecked people and then put the bodies in the cave to hide the crime. And if they are the skel-tons of women and children it would help date the time of the kill, because the Spaniards had neither women nor children with them when they were on this coast.

"A man I know was in the cave in 1938. He said the skeletons at that time were only a scattered jumble of bones, with not a single skull left. It seems that one of the settlers living a few miles from the cave made a number of raids . . .

"There is strong doubt in my mind that the skeletons were of whites. I recall one skull was sent for examination in 1905 and that they reported it was Indian, although of course it's risky for me to hark back almost 60 years.

"Besides, at that time I was not interested in anthropology. My chief concern then was rigging the skull on a make-shift ghost and setting it up in my sister's bedroom . . .

"But I underestimated the 'power of a woman!' If it did scare her I never knew . . . she tossed skull, white sheet and all out of the upstairs window!"

New Light Shed On Old Mystery

Mr. Ilstad recalled another interesting anecdote concerning the mysterious cave.

"... in 1917 a timber cruiser I knew was in Raft Cove. He later told me of an oak keel half-buried in the sand bar. He thought it about 80 feet long ...

"And what deepens the mystery of the cave is the fact that it is such an unlikely area for a dwelling place. There is no decent shelter for miles around Raft Cove, and the cove itself cannot be entered except on high tide—and in good weather.

"In all my years on the coast," Mr. Ilstad continued, "I've never seen an Indian village site that did not have protection from the open sea, where canoes could be launched. Since the natives derived their living from the sea, it is rather obvious that they'd never select a place where they couldn't launch a craft for weeks on end because of winter storms.

"What I mean is that there couldn't have been an Indian village in Raft Cove. Nor is there any sign that there was. These sites are revealed by a pile of clam shells. In the Quatsino village the clam shells are over 10 feet in depth. So it make one wonder why 35 persons would be assembled in such a remote and very unlikely place for a native village.

"And if the victims were killed elsewhere it would mean a farly calm day with high tide to convey the bodies to the cave."

Smithsonian Theory

When the Smithsonian Institution was queried about the cave, J. Lawrence Angel, curator of that museum's division of Physical Anthropology, replied, "... the speciments in our collection which most closely fit the description in your letter are two skulls which, according to our files, were collected by Mr. H. O. Bergh (onetime Quatsino postmaster—author's note) in the neighborhood of Quatsino, B.C., and presented to this museum through Dr. A. K. Fisher of the Biological Survey. The specimens were received here on October 21, 1905.

"One of the skulls is an adult, probably female, and the other is a child about eight years old. Neither one of them shows any signs of violence or injury which could have resulted in death. They are both covered with stalagmite, which would seem to corroborate the story that they were found in a cave.

"These two individuals are not Caucasians, however, and their skulls show definite Mongoloid features. Although there is a remiote chance that they were shippyrecked Japanese, it is more reasonable to assume that they were Indians native to the area."

Are these skulls from Raft Cove? Was the broken oak keel in the sand bar connected with the cave's and inhabitants? These quostions will probably never be answered. . . .

In 1955 Mr. Ilstad almost repeated his father's feat, finding what also might be termed a "akeleton cave."

"In this cave I found a human thigh bone, which was in good shape. There were embers of a fire on the floor, also. My belief is that it—was the remains of an airman who survived a crash landing of a U.S. Navy PBY, about six miles souuth of the cave. I visited the wreck is 1954 and took a photo of two of my partners standing on the wing with machine-guns in their hands. There were about five or six hodies under the wing when the plane was found, but the lone survivor was never located. . . ."

During the next few weeks the Mungo Martin memorial committee will pursue with accelerated effort the $5,500 goal by which means it will pay tribute to this Indian - Canadian. But the handsome plaque this sum will purchase, to be erected in Thunderbird Park, where Chief Mungo worked so many years, can never challenge in beauty or significance the memorials the great conver left the country.

The memorial does provide, however, an opportunity for citizens to show their personal esteem and sympathy for the work he so devotedly contributed to the preservation of an ethnic culture in grave danger of total loss until he intervened.

Lieutenant-Governor George R. Pearkes, VC, whose interest in Indian affairs and people is renowned, has added his voice to the appeal for memorial funds:

"We should support this memorial," he said, "to a very great and famous Canadian will all the vigor at our command."

His words in themselves were a tribute. There have been many others.

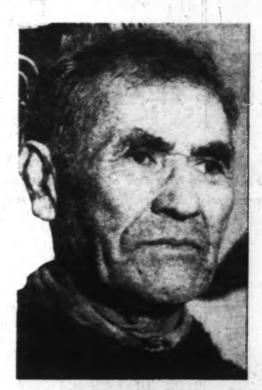

Mungo Martin, for example, is only the second Canadian to have received post-humously the Canadian Council Medal. The first was the late Hon. Brooke Claxton, one-time minister of national defence, and organizer and first chairman of the Canada Council.

Frederica de Laguria of Bryn Mawr Col-lege, long a distinguished officer of the Amer-ican Anthropological Association, who was a great admirer of Mungo Martin and his work and who attended the elaborate ceremonies atidant upon his funeral in Victoria, wrote

"He was internationally famous as an artist The was internationally remous as an artist and craftsman, having been employed since 1952 by the provincial government of B.C. to display his skill in carving at Thunderbird Park. In addition Chief Martin designed original poles, among which is one in Thunderbird Park symbolizing all the Kwakitut tribes; another dedicated in 1956, is the 127-foot pole in Victoria's Beacon Hill Park (the tallest in the world), and a third is the royal pole which he carved in 1958 for Queen Elizabeth, and which stands in Windsor Great Park."

Mungo Martin was born at Fort Rupert, where coal was first discovered on Vancouver Island and where it was mined for years by men of the Hudson's Bay Company. There, in spring, when the people were preparing for r annual culachon expedition to Knight Inlet, little Mungo probably was subjected to the ritual which included the plucking of four eyelashes, woven into a tiny paintbrush, to endow him with artistic gifts. Later he was put into a wooden box drum which was then beaten to imbue him with musical skills.

Besides his carving and designing skills, Chief Mungo collected a vast store of Indian song and legend which he recorded on his own tapes. These stories, names, ceremonials were considered an heirloom to be passed on to his son David. But David was drowned in a fishing accident. Chief Mungo, heartbroken, presented his recordings to the Provincial Museum.

Perhaps no Canadian Indian did more than Chief Martin to secure recognition and honor or the culture of his people, and so helped to win for the Indians equal rights under Canadian laws," wrote Frederica de Laguna.

When Mungo Martin died, happily his recollections did not perish with him. And his last wish was that his son-in-law, Henry Hunt, and his great grandson be allowed to carry on

It was his wish that he be buried at Alert Bay, heart of the island's east coast Indian fishing industry.

As Ottawa sailed out of Esquimalt harbor every ensign was dipped in salute

It was the first time in the navy's history an honor had been paid an Indian.

Chief Mungo, when first he came to Vic-toria, was a lonely man. This he made evident in a speech to he Kwakiutl chiefs whom he invited to his potlatch at Thunderbird House in 1953. He had meticulously rehearsed the ceremonial. To the chiefs he said:

"Now Nuknenes, now we are finished. That Thank you, chiefs. You have put strength into me, for I was very weak all by myself away from home. I almost cry sometimes when there is nobody here to help me.

"And you have come to help, you with your famous names, you chiefs. You have strengthened me. Your fame will spread because you are here. You have strength for you know everything. You too have been left to take up the duties which have been passed on to you. So you will help me to finish what I want to do."

His language loses much in translation. The idiom is more forceful, more colorful, more moving. Chief Mungo had the native

But if he paid compliments to the Kwakiutl chiefs, in his heart he knew that there was danger the old culture, the old-stories, traditions and beliefs, might be lost.

In the issue of Nov. 10, 1963, The Islander was privileged to disclose some amusing incidents heretofore untold in the life of Emily Carr and her neighbors, and there was mention, too, of her Man Friday, "Willie" Newcombe, to the boys next door a figure of fun.

Now author-researcher Mr. Hudson has re-created the character of Miss Carr's Man Friday, and it transpires he is a figure in B.C.'s history as imposing, in his way, as Miss Carr herself.

In the Musty Rooms of An Old Home They Found a Veritable Treasure

VICTORIA'S GENTLE

WILLIAM A. NEWCOMBE was Man Friday to Miss Emily Carr.

Willie, as he was affectionately called, befriended a long list of grateful widows, pensioners and the assorted needy. He gave his help anonymously, voluntarily. He was a familiar figure on every James Bay street, yet few knew of his ministrations or his secret treasure.

His services in the far-off days when I first knew him was certainly not even suspected by me as he pottered obediently around Miss Carr's home next to ours. With beach-combed lumber he constructed canvas frames and crated her paintings for shipment. He was an object more for mild teasing than for admiration to my brother and myself; yet he was a man who in his field and in his time was one of British Columbia's outstanding characters. Miss Carr, more than once, had provided clues to what Willie really was, although it had made no impression on my callow ears.

"It's a sorry shame he has been treated that way after all his years of hard work," Miss Carr cried once with some exasperation.

Willie himself said nothing and continued to scurry about, obviously a little afraid at times, for "Millie" wasn't above turning on him and giving him a lecture on the evils of letting himself go. A favorite topic was Willie's reluctnace to get himself a set of false teeth. He didn't then, and I understand that he never did. This gave his face a rather older look than it should have had for in all other respects he had a strong, wiry physical makeup, conditioned by years of fresh air and exercise.

My brother and I termented this man with the kindly grey-blue eyes, yet I never remember an unkind retert. Dark bushy hair and a prominent nose made him easy to recognize patrolling the beaches in the morning, looking for the lumber that he salvaged daily until his backyard resembled a wood dealer's. This salvage was the busis of Willie's benevolence. He would build your fence almost for nothing, repair steps and do jobs all over the neighborhood. My brother deliberately best him to his favorite beach-combing area one morning just beside the breakwater and it was said ever afterward that Willie got up at 4 a.m. to make sure he was the first on the beach.

My impish brother also related how every day for a week he had watched Miss Carrverbally lambaste Willie for not putting away a ladder, which mysteriously always seemed By BERT HUDSON to be leaning against the side of the house next to the maid's window. Willie was sure he had put it away daily. "Perhaps he did, eh?" my brother said, polcing me in the ribs.

"WILLIE" NEWCOMER
... he played rugby in Victoria in 1911.

It was only in later years that I learned of the treasure that Willie guarded in his stone house on Dallas Road, a rather forbidding place with a high hedge around it, and lumber stacked in the back, where, incidentally, a small house was occupied for years by Hamilton Smith, then Victoria's oldest living resident. Typically Willie allowed him to live there rent free.

Close by, in another musty house, I was once taught plano and manners by a sister, Miss Smith, who, I believe, had more success with other Victorian students than myself.

But back in the Newcombe house, in the musty rooms rarely entered was what was one day to become known as the Newcombe Collection and it was Willie's real life.

The Newcombe Collection of Indian Artifacts was purchased in 1962 by the Provincial Government; it was the thing he had given up scholarships for, had given up worldly possessions for, and which in some measure had, tragically, proken his heart had, tragically, broken his heart,

William A. Newcombe was a naturalist.
Untutored, but self-taught and with the consuming passion that was kindled by his father, Mr. Newcombe knew more about native Indian lore probably than any man in B.C. in the first half of the century. He was the man who realized the importance of the Indian culture which was fading as the white man's blight swept over the Indian villages. With dedication Willie Newcombe spent his life preserving what he could.

This was his secret and he kept it well. Few people ever penetrated into the rooms that stored the relics that will one day be priceless. Photographs, and even sketches, were for a long time anbu.

It was only after his death and the subsequent sale to the Provincial Archives and Museum that belated recognition of his devotion to his craft was born.

Among his effects were approximately a hundred canwages by Emily Carr. Here, too, his had known the worth of something still unrecognized and kept them, some undoubtedly rescued from the refuse as he chored around Emily Carr's grey house.

around Emily Carr's grey house.

Now, too, his role with Emily Carr becomes clear. Far from just a Man Friday, he had in many ways been her instructor. To her interest in the Indians was added his great knowledge. He supplied her with photographs of villages she had never seen and from which she did paintings. Totems, Indian heads, all manner of artifacts were brought from Willie's collection for Emily Carr to paint. Willie would have been the last to publicize his contribution.

It was because Mins Carr knew of Willie's talent that she became so irate over his tragic dismissal from the provincial museum. For four years, from 1928 to 1932, he had been assistant biologist at the museum, which at that time, unfortunately, was in a rather unorganized state. There are a number of versions of why he left and forever turned away from any association with the provincial government.

It is said that this dismissal tragically affected this sensitive man. The rebuff altered his personality to the point that he became almost a recluse. Ironically, the several articles that were "missing" were found some years later hidden in an out-of-the-way place in the museum.

But the wound had been made and did not heal easily and for the next twenty years no one penetrated into his personal treasure-house within the Newcombe home, probably for fear that his ownership would be shallenged.

to his original research.

Nor was William A. Newcombe fust interested in Indian anthropological collections. His scientific curiosity had led him into many different fields, such as his Triangle Island collection of birds' eggs, which Lieutenant-Governor Randolph Bruce used to come to examine when William was employed at the provincial museum as biologist. His collection of mosses started Mrs. Hugh MacKenzie on the road to becoming an expert. Others received valuable information on Indian weaving, and the list goes on, for this man accumulated information on everything from tide patterns to the habits of the sea otter. And he happily shared his knowledge.

In his later years he lived a simple bachelor life in a couple of rooms at the rear of his house while his treasure accumulated dust in the main body of the home.

A friend, Frank Swannell, tells an amusing anecdote about once trading a piece of headwork for a book. The beadwork Willie placed on a chair in his home. Twenty years later Mr. Swannell was once again in the room. Ho naw to his astonishment that the beadwork-was in the exact same place.

One of the other rare visitors to the treas-largely accumulated by a self-taught man, and one wonders what might have been accomplished had he been given the tools of a scientific education and the resources of a university or government department to aid his expeditions.

Great credit must therefore go to Charles Frederick Newcombe, William's father, who was himself an outstanding individual, being among other things B.C.'s first psychiatrist. It was this talent as a psychiatrist that enabled the father to understand the Indian tribes among whom he worked as a physician for so many years. Although trained in England the physician soon became an expert collector and consultant anthropologist and supplied museums all over the world with examples of Indian art. He is said to have taken an expedition to the St. Louis World Fair, and Willie, his son, now 16, left school and became his right-hand man, and for six months saw to the organizing and arranging of this ambitious expedition.

Willie left school and gave up a scholarship at this important turning point in his life.
Although he had been a bright student, the call of the ocean voyages with his father was too enticing and he became a student guided by his scientist father and his own natural curiosity as they ranged the coast in their stout converted fishing boat. The Pelican.
These must have been happy days and William was never far from his father until the call to duty in the First World War. Willie reluctantly left his father's side for service in the army.

Both the father and the son grew to international eminence, and scientific papers were exchanged in great numbers with institutes in North America and abroad. The Haida Indians were a specialty of Willie and even in his later years he was still able to lead an expedition from the University of B.C. to recover and preserve some of the last remaining Anthony Island totems of that most creative native culture. His photographs of the site had been taken nearly half a continuous carrier.

had been taken nearly half a century earlier.

When one talks with any of William A. Newcombe's old friends, there is an almost universal recognition of two qualities: Most prevalent in his later years is the quality of gentleness and good humor, and this is so amply testified to by the people for whom he did his little services and cheerfully refusing anything but token payment. With this was a quality of bravery without fanfare. Even in his late years he scrambled about on high roofs replacing shingles in areas that would have made younger, stronger men quait. This quiet disregard for personal hardship could be traced back to his early childhood in the Hood River country of Oregon, where he had uncomplainingly endured several bouts of

One other rare visitor was Miss Betty Newton who was allowed to sketch some Indian heads and totems.

Well. I feel cheuted, for I knew this man and I knew Emily Carr, and I failed to understand either. Miss Carr frightened me with her brusqueness, which was really only an honesty; and in her Man Friday, William Newcombe, I failed to discover that under that wide, floppy fedora and behind those bright blue eyes was a person from whom I could one of the happy, if Ironic aspects of the story is that their valuable collection is now in the hands of the provincial museum. Muchof it is stored and not even evaluated. However, its great worth is hinted at. One day it will prove priceless.

It seemed so absolutely fitting that William Newcombe's ashes were scattered off the Dallas Road breakwater—where they must have washed in among the flotsam and carried along the rocky shore where he beach-combed every morning so diligently.

Man Friday's spirit still guards a bit of his heloved coast, while his memory lives in a world of science and art.

The Spirit Voice Said GO, GO, GO!

Who knows what a train agent was? A train agent in 1920 on the CNR was the man who collected all the money on passenger trains that were too short to support a ticket collector, sleeping car conductor and dining car steward. So, as a train agent I was sent to Prince Rupert in the spring of 1920 in an attempt to save the railroad from the bankruptcy other train agents had been arranging for it.

and they escaped disaster

My run was to be from Prince Rupert to Prince George, twice weekly, and all money collected for Caesar was to be rendered unto Caesar.

Rupert in those days was wonderful, weird and wild, but through advertisements in the local newspaper I was fortunate in getting a good room in a suite occupied by a very nice married lady and her daughter. The husband was away at sea.

The suite was in a frame apartment block balanced on top of a prominent hill at the back of the city. I say "back" because the city faces the ocean and goes back as far as the nearest mountain - which isn't far.

The room was large, well furnished and spotlessly clean; almost painfully so, and the lady was a fine looking woman of middle age with a fine looking daughter who was not middled aged. But it was always the mother, not the daughter, who looked in on me now and then to ask about my comfort and Maybe There's a Relic in Your Home . . .

Auctioneers and anthropologists, museum directors and detectives, all have one thing in common. Power of deduction.

Remember the story of the New England sailor, fed up with the sea, who vowed he'd put an oar on his shoulder and walk so far inland that when people asked what he was carrying there he would settle down.

Don't Throw It Away!

Maybe you are one of those who would ask how far he walked; or interested perhaps to know if he made a success of the farm. The antiquarian, however, wants to know what happened to the our! This one proved to be a curiosity; possibly in time, an even greater one.

Which brings me to the point that Victoria is full of such things, some on public view, others hidden away. Invariably they have a history.

A few years ago when taking in the display at the old Helmcken house on Elliott Street, which in itself is a curiosity (it's 112 years old) I noticed an old muzzle-loading shotgun leaning against a fireplace. Of course, like most pioneer weapons, it showed signs of long and hard use, but I took it over near a window and with a little hard breathing and buffing with a handkerchief, a spot on the barrel showed faint crosswise spirals. As I figured, it was a Damascus barrel.

If you're thinking, however, of the superlative steel turned out in that Syrian city nine centuries ago, you'll have to think again. The Damascus I'm referring to is a trade name and the story goes back to the middle of the last century before Sir William Siemen showed the world the knack of turning out high-carbon steel in quantities.

Then, only sufficient was available for firearms, swords and cutlery. Which is why the rolling atock on Britain's first railways had so many fractured wheels—they were iron.

Steel was then a process of repeated heating, beating and quenching, and the commonest product was the lowly horseshoe nail, which in time was scattered over the highways and byways of Europe. However, in their manufacture they were part-way on the road to becoming steel, so were collected by millions of kids and channelled through junk men to Birmingham's gun plants. There they were joined end to end while incandescent, and the resulting "wire" wound round a mandrel. Finally, by a tricky bit of manipulation the whole red-hot spiral was united into a solid tube. When it cooled, it was the start of a Damascus barrel.

If you come across one, the tighter the spiral the better the barrel. The Helmcken gun had rings over haif an inch apart, so I figured it didn't cost much. For those interested, the shot in those days rested against the powder charge in a thin gauze tube.

See the amount of history one old gun can produce!

'Bunch of Junk'

Like another historical relic that came to my mind when I heard recently of some dispute over the pioneer museum out in Saanich. There was talk, you'll remember, of a fireproof building being needed, and I think one committeeman remarked that the exhibits were nothing but a "bunch of junk." It's probably two or three years ago now

It's probably two or three years ago now since a couple of kindly Saanich pioneers, Willard, Michell and the late Dick Nimmo showed me around this museum. Suddenly my interest quickened when I spotted an antique sewing machine, once the property of the Moses family. Greater was the interest when I spotted the magic words "Elias Howe Patent."

A day or two later I sent details of it, along with a picture, to the Smithsonian Institute and back in due course came a reply from Grace Rogers of the Textile Division. She identified it as one of the earliest of Singer's products, made either in 1856 or 1857.

If you're wondering where Elias Howe comes in, well, that's the main interest. He was the son of an impoverished Massachusetts farmer who, as a boy, headed for Boston to become apprenticed to a watchmaker. His mechanical bent developed until one day he applied himself to making a thing he called a sewing machine. Just 22, newly wed, it took him five years of spare time work to master the problems, and finally in 1846 he filed a working model with the U.S. patent office. Which was about the time he found he'd licked only half the problem. No one it seemed was the slightest bit interested in what he had done, even when he matched his machine against five women sewing in unison.

Undiscouraged he took the model to Britain, where an alert London corset maker took up the British rights. However, before final details were worked out, Howe was summoned home on account of his wife's illness. Working his passage as a cook on a salling ship, he arrived in time to reach the bedside of his dying wife. When he had time to look round, he got another blow. Several companies were turning out sewing machines, and what's more they were pirating his invention.

Luckily a friend put up some money for legal fees and when he won the first case, a cash award paved the way for the next court-room battle, until finally Singer, Wheeler & Wilson, Grove & Baker and one or two others had to pay him past and future royalties on every machine they sold, and in addition add his name to every one of them.

By the time the civil war broke out, Howe was really in the chips ($4,000 a week), so for change of pace, he equipped a Union regiment at his own expense, then served in it (as a buck private) until the war's end.

Today, of the 800 patented models of sewing machines in the Smithsonian, the really rare ones bear the name of Elias Howe—like the one out in Saanich. Had it not been for the fact that some of its treadle mechanism has disappeared over the years, it might today outvalue the building that houses it. "Junk," the man said!

Ancient Loco'

Another sizeable bit of junk, that should by rights be housed at Nanaimo, stands on a spur track near Taku Inlet close to the Yukon border,

It's a little, old-fashioned locomotive with a unique place in our western history. Not only is it the oldest locomotive in B.C., but the oldest west of the Red River.

There have been at least three locomotives of earlier vintage, but all have been broken up for scrap metal.

For, strange to say, there was railroading around the Nanaimo mines 13 years before the famed "Countess of Dufferin" ever saw Winnipeg.

It was in 1878 that mine magnate Robert Dunsmuir bought a couple of little 0-6-0 saddle-tanks, called the Duke and Duchess, to haul coal from Wellington to Departure Bay wharf. Though the Duke was junk about 1909, the Duchess still survives; principally because she's the heroine of a rather extraordinary railroading story.

Getting in and out of Atlin at the time of the Klondike rush meant crossing Atlin Lake by steamer to Scotia Bay, then making the 2½ mile portage to Taku Inlet, and thus to connect with the Yukon River.

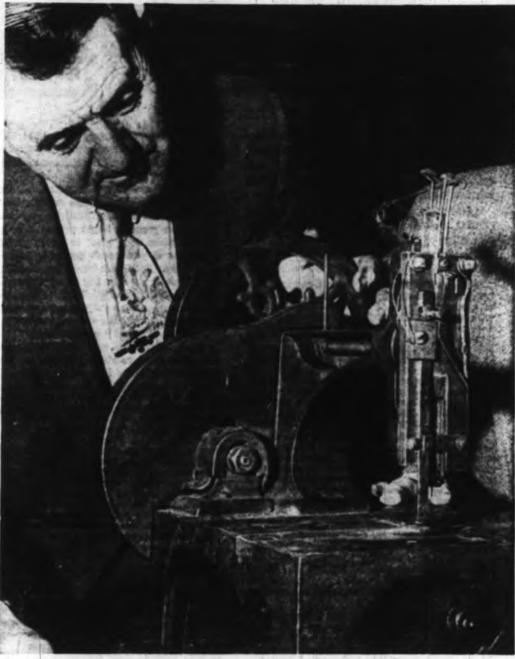

The first goldseekers to use the portage in any number pushed their baggage on a flat car over wooden rails. Then a horse was used. Finally in 1899 Capt. John Irving brought the little Duchess up from Nanaimo and the Atlin Southern Railway was born. Apart from the fact that the lake was 40 feet higher than the inlet, there was also a bit of grade to master; miners who paid $2 for the trip (highest fare on the continent) had to jump off at times and help out the Duchess! Converted in her day from coal to wood and then to oil, finally she was pushed onto a spur track to become a tourist attraction. She'll celebrate her 88th birthday this year.

Speaking of tourist attractions (which is where this preservation idea pays off) maybe you were one of the hundred thousand that made up this summer's "gold rush" to Barlorville?

While you were taking in the sights did you happen to notice a frame building with leaded glass swinging doors that bore the legend "Grotto"?

Here's another quaint story that falls under the heading of "Preservation of Historical Objects": The tale goes back to 1867, a year when Canadians back east were celebrating Confederation and British Columbians (who weren't Canadians) had their own direct line to the British cabinet.

That was the year that Bill McNiffe changed the location of his Government Street

Willard Michell, one of the famed Saanich pioneer family, inspects an aged relic in the Saanichton museum . . . one of Elias Howe's sewing machines, from which he made a fortune.

Grotto saloon to the south side of Trounce Alley, near Government. There for half a century, and long after McNiffe passed on, the ceaseless swing of the Grotto's doors released to the alley alternate snatches of the babel within, along with its heady, spirituous fragrance.

Due to a change in the Liquor Act, it was about 1911 that the then proprietor. Seth Chamberlain, had to integrate the Grotto with some hotel, so he moved to the corner of Douglas and View to become part of the Vernon Hotel.

There, opposite the Sayward (now the Scollard) building, the doors continued to swing until prohibition in 1917 held the customer's conversation to monosyllabics, and their drinks to "near" beer.

At the war's end now even the saloon premises were going the way of horse collars and button shoes, and the thirsty had to rely on a doctor's prescription or purchase by the case from Calgary. If your Uncle Zeke was then a farmer, you'll remember how he used to tone up his system with Tanke and Prunella. In the 40 years that followed perhaps the only people who ever thought of the Grotto were a few old-time bartenders in process of qualifying for the old age pension.

Came a day in the 1950's when a work crew clearing out some hidey-hole in the local Lucky Lager Brewery, uncovered the historic Grotto doors. It was from my brother Vic, then manager of the brewery, that I heard how, with pride and interest, the boys in the carpenter shop scraped cleaned and varnished the famous doors until they were just like new. When I viewed them, I was amazed to find how heavy they were and how extraordinarily well made. Looking them over; came the germ of an idea: A photographic idea.

Brewmaster Walter Spershott (he's today's manager) fell in with our bit of jocularity which entailed borrowing a white apron, a flowing false moustache, and of course a cigar. Finally we dug out of the brewery museum the biggest glass we could find. I think it held about a quart and a half, and just for realism we filled it. Then a couple of willing helpers held up the doors, and Walter, glass in hand, struck his gay nineties pose!

Shortly after that Woodward's manager Courtney Haddock had them for a window display, then I lost track of them until a couple of years ago I spotted them adding lustre to reconstituted Barkerville.

Which is only right and fitting. For afterall it was Barkerville's gold that helped push Victoria to its early-day eminence. Sort of like repaying an old debt!

September brings us about halfway through the parade of fruits . . . Your fruit shelves should now be picture-pretty and colorful as a rajah's jewels with crimson berries, cherries, apricots and peaches.

If you have never used the combination of crange or lemon and ginger do try a few jars . . . it lifts the pears right into the realm of the sublime Simply peal, haive or quarter the pears and pack in jars with about six slices of orange (or lemon) arranged in the jar so that they will show against the glass. When filled add a few slivers of preserved ginger and fill the jar with prepared syrup. I like a fairly rich syrup for pee as you always do for the type of jar used.

The bell-shaped, yellow Bartlett pear is de-licious when eaten out of hand. And there is nothing finer for desert than a cheese tray with wedges of unpeeled pears. Sliced or halved, this pear's white, finegrained flesh adds mellow sweetness to fruit bowls and sainds. It is ideal as breakfast fruit. Of all the varieties it is my favorite for canning.

Consult your MURIEL WILSON COLONIST COOK BOOK, Page 90, for an excellent recipe for Ginger-Pear Marmalade. It is really delicious, Fresh fruit saleds are always popular and for something really special I'd like you to try Marinated Pear Salad Delight . . . juicy Bartlett pear halves, a marinade, stuffed dates and crisp lettuce.

MARINATED PEAR SALAD DELIGHT and oil, 14 cup lemon juice or white wine vinegar, ½ tsp. salt, 2 thep, chopped paraley, 4 tsp. chopped pimiento, ½ tsp, sweet hadi, 6 pitted dessert dates, ¼ cup tangy choose spread and crisp lettuce. Wash, halve and core pears. In a jar mix all remaining ingredients except the dates, cheese spread and lettuce. Cover and shake well. Place pear halves cut tide down in shallow bowl and pour dressing over them. Cover and let stand for I to 11/2 hours. Stuff dates with cheese spread. Arrange pears cut side up on lettuce-lined serving plate, garnish with stuffed dates. Spoon sining dressing over pears. Makes six servings.

With hot rolls or crispy toasted French bread this salad would stiumlate table talk at your next bridge luncheon. It's a show-off of a salad that tastes as good as it looks

Another word about Bartletts . . . be sure the skins are golden before serving the fruit. In local stores, skins of Bartletts may range in color from green to bright yellow. The yellowskinned pears that "give" to gentle pressure in the palms of your hands are ready to be eaten right away. But if you buy green-skinned pears, store them in a paper bag at room temperature and they will ripen perfectly without loss of flavor. Inspect them daily, removing those that are ready to use. After they ripen keep them in the refrigerator until you serve them.

Pears, which are now eaten by every class of society, were considered by Persian kings of ancient times to be as rare as precious jewels. Near the middle of the 19th century they were the pride of the French nobility who vied for the honor of cultivating the best pears. Some of our winter varieties such as d'Anjou and Bosc are, in fact, descendents of varieties cultivated in famous French or-chards. Besides the Bartletts, d'Anjou and Bose there are two other popular the Okanagan, British Columbian pears are unexcelled anywhere in the ... the result of constant stu in both growing and storage. If left on the trees to ripen, pears will turn soft in the centre and finally drop off. They must be picked while still green and ripened off the trees. The pears you buy in our markets are picked at the ecientific moment of truth . . . they will ripen perfectly.

Here are some ways to use pears: Pear Appetizer . . . peel and quarter ripe pears, remove cores and dip quarters in lemon juice. Serve on individual plates with thinly sliced ham or with alices of Swiss cheese.

Pear and Orange Salad . . . alternate slices of peeled ripe pears with orange stices on crisp lettuce. Sprinkle with chopped chives. Serve with French dressing.

Pears and Cheese Salad . . . pears and cheese have an affinity for each other. Arrange slices of pealed ripe pears on salad greens and sprinkle generously with grated cheddar cheese. Pass the French dressing.

Pear-Shrimp Salad . . . 2 firm but ripe pears, peeled and diced, 1 tbsp. lemon julca, 2 tins (4½ oz.) shrimp or ½ lb. fresh shrimp. ½ cup chopped green pepper. 2 tbsp. chopped pimiento, 1 cup sour cream, 1 thap, chopped chives, % cup chili sauce, and crisp lettuce. In a large bowl toss pears with the lemon juice, coating well. Add shrimp, green pepper and pimiento. In a small bowl combine sour cream, chili sauce and chives. Add to pears, tossing lightly to combine. Refrigerate, covered, at least an hour before serving. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves. This is surprisingly good . . . the pears a nice change from the celery usually used.

Bartletts and Flemish Beauty pears bake beautifully. Do them the same as you would do apples. Put peeled and halved pears in a shalaking dish. Add about 16 inch of water. Fill the hollows with brown sugar and grated lemon rind. Squeeze the juice of the lemon over all Cover for the first part of baking. Remove cover and spoon syrup in pan over the pears several times. Serve hot or cold with pouring cream. The centres may be filled with a tart jelly or try a spoonful of orange marmalade in each half.

DEAR HELOISE:

I use an iced-tea spoon when feeding my baby. My hand does not come so close to the baby's face and scare him. The size and shape of this long-handled spoon also fits his little mouth better.

As the baby grows a bit older I use a sugar spoon for soup. The baby can manage this better when learning to feed himself.

When using canned noodle soup for the baby, I open the can and take a knife and run it through the noodles to chop them up before heating the soup with the required amount of liquid. The noodles are easier to chop up this way and the baby can handle the smaller bites more Rita

This feature is written for you . . . the housewife and homemaker. If you have a hint, problem or suggestion you'd like to share . . write to Heleise today in care of this

Men of Search and Rescue

By JOHN SHAW, Editor, The Islander

First of all, here's a typical crew of an Albatross belonging to 121 KU (Search and Rescue) Squadron, recently moved to RCAF's big Comox base, but still working under orders of the Rescue Co-ordination Centre in Vancouver where it formerly was main-

There is the captain, Fit. Lt. D. M. Willard, a broad-shouldered. blondish flying veteran, with a break in service as a bush pilot, in the port-side forward seat; and beside him, as copilot and first officer, there is Fit. Lt. P. Montgomery, a chunky, close-cropped young man with direct game and ready Salt Spring and Gallano Island.

Immediately behind him is the radio officer's seat and instruments, which should belong to Fit. Lt. T. Small, but is now occupied by a passenger-ob-server; across the aisle is a ceiling-high panel of instruments:

Back in the next compartment sits the navigator, Fit. Lt. J. Scoles, and further astern is Sgt. R. E. Braidner, jump-master, and two jumpers, G. W. McNutt, another veteran, and LAC W. A. Fullbrook, only a few weeks out of his parachutist's course.

The big airplane is moving tail-first down the concrete ramp at Patricia Bay under power, because her two props have reversible pitch.

And now the last member of the crew, Cpl. R. E. Diebert, the flight - technician, comes forward, crawls between the two pilots' seats and through the little door into the nose of the aircraft. He'll hook on to a buoy, presently, as the cap-tain manoeuvres alongside.

The flight-technician crawls back into the body of the aircraft, and the throttles send her roaring down her take-off course

"Flags!" We are climbing slowly, heading northeast. There are fishing boats in Satellite Channel and a few little yachts under sail in Maple Bay. We are crossing the northern end of Salt Spring Island, and Trincomall Channel is wrinkled with the wind between the airplane and Gallano Island, RCAF's Black Duck is standing by and re-directed, and the "rescuing" helicopter is in sight to the north.

The jumpers are at the open door, the jumpmaster has made his last check of their gear. Below, for a moment, as she banks. there is the crashboat trailing

The Albatross circles the jump zone and the parachutes are filled, the jumpers swaying below and behind us.

For a few minutes they are out of sight, but as the captain brings the airplane down for a closer look, aiready the crashboat has lifted young Fullbrook out of the water. At 1102 the helicopter has hoisted McNutt on a wire and the show is over.

It isn't as easy as it looks, of course. Imagine this same operation in wild weather, in heavy rain or sleet or snow, over fanged mountains and misted valleys or some sea-lashed beach. Imagine a helicopter drop by cable to the deck of a wrecked ship. Imagine the impossible. Because that is frequently the assignment. The astonishing thing is the rescue missions have a record of achievement little less than perfect.

Consider the jumpers. They do a six-month course in Edmonton and at Jasper, jumping into bush, water and snow. McNutt has been four years in IN COMMAND

They got all three of the victims out, although only the badlyburned boy survived.

She said she was psychic and influenced by mental messages frequently received from a departed grandmother. Call it premonition, hunch, intuition, or what you like, but many people claim to have had

With West Coast for a Background FAST

Have you ever met a relaxed dynamo? No? Then let me introduce you to John Young, one of Canada's top commercial freelance color shooters who knows the B.C. coast like his own backyard. He makes movie films on such subjects as pipelines, pulp and paper, electric power, gas well drilling, sport and mission work.

To look at he's a slim, wiry man with humorous blue eyes and brown hair "falling down behind" - as one of his very young picture posers put it. Full of ideas and energy and with a positive way of expressing both, he stays calm and cool as the proverbial cucumber no matter how dangerous or exasperating the situation.

When he and I, a doctor and two missionarles were up to our knees in the icy water of Kingcome Inlet, with our small boat going through all the motions of sinking under us, John did what he could for his expensive equipment and then looked for a bailer. Not finding one, he asked: "Has anyone got a piece of blotting paper?"

"My camera has taken me on battleships, bombers, submarines, balloons: up in the mountains, down in the mines," reminisced John after we were rescued. "I've had it freeze on me and shot film when I was up to my neck in water. I've climbed every gas tank between Victoria and St. John's or that's the way it seems.

When filming from a movie cargo plane er Vancouver Island, the doors had to be taken off so the photographer could do his job properly. John stood on the loading platform in the doorway, presumably roped for safety, Suddenly he realized that the platform had been inching forward and he was now staring down into several thousand feet of space. At the same moment he discovered that the rope wasn't holding him any more. "Come down," he shouted to the pilot, "or I'll be down before you!"

At least he got something on film that time, but there was the day near Jordan River when John set out to make a sequence featuring a giant steel tower that would carry high tension lines. To get there he travelled by car, mountain railroad speeder and shank's mare. Arriving late on a Friday afternoon, he set up his camera in a hurry and said to the dozen or so men working on the tower:

"Don't pay any attention to the camera. Just do exactly what you would be doing if there were no camera here."

At that precise moment the man on the speeder down below blew his whistle to announce that it was 4:30 p.m. As if it had all been rehearsed, each worker dropped his tools, grabbed his coat and lunch kit and was off down the trail like a scalded cat.

Does It Himself

Being Scots-Canadian and stubborn, John got that sequence filmed eventually. Born in Edinburgh, he took his first photos with a pinhole camera that cost a penny. The de veloper cost far more than camera and the results were fuzzy. "But there was something in the whole thing that gave me the bug," said John. In bars of toffee he found printing frames consisting of two pieces of cardboard, a negative and printing paper. Then came his first Ensign, which is like our Brownie.

Now the embryo producer wanted pictures that moved, so at twelve he made his first movie projector. He bought the plans for a shilling, pasted them on jam tins and then cut them out with scissors. The projector worked well afterwards, but the scissors didn't. Light came from a carbide lamp and a fish bowl full of water for a condenser.

"When this outfit was assembled it didn't leave much room to get around, but I sure found out what flickers meant. For a long time I stuck with a camera that had a hand because more people noticed me that way than if I'd used a camera that worked by motor. His first movie was a sports film and he hadn't thought about earning money with it, but when he was asked for a price he gave Soon he was so good that he could demand pretty high prices. He filmed adver-tising stunts, organization picnics—anything he was asked to do. In between he spent hours studying the chemistry of movies.

By this time the whole Young family-five brothers and two sisters, with their parents were in Canada. That was fine with John, for when he stepped off the train in British Columbia he felt, "This is my home!" It still is. Now he lives in Richmond, so as to be near two other members of his family. Brothers and sisters are scattered between British Columbia. Alberta and Washington.

"Maybe I could have gone farther and faster if I had accepted California offers," mused John, "but it was always Canada for

He went far and fast as it was and the last war didn't slow him down a bit. On arrival overseas with the Air Force, he was with 34 other photographers when an officer asked for four volunteers for special press work. 'I have my picture taken almost every day and I never get any of them. How about giving me one?"

John Young volunteered for the Pacific and was on his way there when the war ended. Back in Canada he became Director of Photography for Trans Canada Films. From that he moved into free lance work with emphasis on

"You know," said this photographer with ideas, "each region should have its own film unit, set up by the government to make regional films. The story of British Colum-bia hasn't nearly been told. There should be films made for the schools that would make the pupils really sit up and take notice. Why can't people endow films for schools instead putting up monuments or stained glass

It's a good question, especially with dropouts the problem they are and many pupils giving sheer boredom as their reason for leaving. John also has ideas about films shot in Britain for Canada, through the eyes of a Canadian.

Progressive People

"Even yet we don't realize how progressive the British are. The makers of too many documentaries hang around sheep herders, coal miners and old women sitting on rocks and spinning. How about that new steel mill in Wales, said to be the most up-to-date in the world? And it looks as though Glasgow would be first in Europe to have TV piped to all achools.

There could be a big improvement in missionary films, this forthright photographer feels. Careful editing, clever writing and the selection of appropriate background music often means the difference between a good movie and just another amateur effort.

"Missionaries are not, as a rule, film producers and so many of the films made by th are a waste of time, money and, maddest of all, opportunity. One missionary film I saw a while ago was an hour long and valued at $12,000. About 40 feet of it was worth looking For that money three first class productions on the same subject could have been

THE ARTIST WAS A FRAUD WITH SKILL OF A GENIUS

A clever man was Hans van Meegeren. But he was a poor artist. His works were disdained by the critics, passed-over by the buyers and ignored by the general

Yet that did nothing to prevent the little Dutchman from making an immense fortune with his painting. In fact he made millions - through one of the most clever large-scale forgeries of all time.

He painted wonderful, glowing paintings - and sold them as Vermeers. And as Vermeers, of course, they commanded fabulous prices.

But the astounding part of the van Meegeren story was that he ever managed it at all. For the Vermeers he painted, though fakes, were almost masterpieces in their own right.

They were beautifully executed, exactly followed the master's style, and bubbled with life.

But the pictures van Meegeren painted under his own name were so inferior that it was impossible to believe that they could have been the products of the same person. They were drab, flat, dull and

His hoax-which he voluntarily confessed in 1945 brought him great riches, and fooled art experts and museum chiefs all over the world

It had probably all started about ten years before, in 1937. A dusty, old painting, dug out of a Paris garret, was identified by the monogram as a genuine Vermeer. Jan Vermeer of Delft was one of the great 17th-century masters of the Dutch school. His original paintings were in great demand. A new discovery was a "find" indeed. So the art experts flocked to Paris in droves to inspect for themselves this new mas-terplece. One after another they solemnly pro-claimed that this was, without doubt, a genuine Vermeer—one of the great painter's finest, in fact. The few reluctant dissenters who thought it might not be genuine were quickly over-ered by the immense pressure of opinion. How he planted the painting we shall probably never know. But this was Hans van Meegeren's first art hoax-and an outstanding success it proved to be.

"We have here the masterpiece of Johannes Vermeer of Delft," rhapsodised one English

He was merely expressing the mood of the moment, for experts everywhere were offering

In fact, the Boymans Museum in Rotter-dam bought the work for 540,000 Dutch guildwhich in those days, were worth close to $350,000. And millions of copies of the painting which was called "De Emmanagangers" and showed Christ bleming the bread, were swiftly sold to an engerly-waiting public. Gradually, over the years, more newly-discovered Vermeers found their way on to the market. Then came other works of lesser, but nevertheless important, painters.

They caused less public upheaval than the first Vermeer but were readily accepted as genuine, and fetched high prices.

Hans van Meergeren never came into the bargaining which went on over the paintings he had produced. He kept himself sensibly in the background and allowed others to do the work for him. One of his forgeries, "The Last Supper," went to a private dealer for over a million

In peacetime, van Meegeren's fortune-making scheme would probably have been uncovered much earlier.

Instead, he went from strength to strength. His Vermeers were sold at ever-growing prices -even to the occupying German forces.

van Meergeren's undoing, And that was For after the war there was an inquiry. One of the finest Vermeers, it was discovered, had en sold outside the country, and that was

Police tracked the sale to a German banker called Miedl who had already fled the country, They discovered that throughout the war he had been paying van Meergeren large sums of money.

They burrowed further and soon had enough evidence to convict van Meergeren for taking part in the illegal business of allowing masterpieces to leave the country without government permission.

Van Meegeren, frail and timid, was arrested and taken to jail. Within a few days he broke down, and said he wanted to make a full confession.

The confession that all the "new" Vermeers were forgeries stunned and shocked the entire world of art-and not least the unfortunate few who bought those costly fakes

At first no one would take van Meegeren seriously. His confession could very easily have been an attempt to wriggle out of his luckless situation.

But van Meegeren stuck to his story, and would not be shaken. Officials decided to put him to the test, was returned to his studios, supplied with all the equipment he needed, and told: "Go on-paint another Vermeer masterpiece,"

The officials looked on, cynical and scornful, as van Meegeren set to work. But their scorn rapidly turned to dumbfounded amazement, as a new "Vermeer" began to appear

He offered other proofs the models he had used for his works, the studios he had used to point them secretly. And he arew an exact Vermeer which he replica of the first "new" had not seen for more than ten years.

The officials and experts were eventually convinced. The only question which remained was: What to do with the forger?

Many wanted him to go free but his Nazi connections during the war told against him.

In 1947, he was brought to trial and jailed for a year for forgeries. A short while after his sentence began, he died.

The Future Is Not Bright

DOG RIBS TRAVEL UNFAMILIAR TRAIL

What hope is there for Indians living in the Canadian Arctic who have been exposed to the white man's way of life but cannot adjust to, nor acquire the comforts of modern living?

The future is gloomy for some 700 Dog Rib Indians living at Rae, the largest Indian settlement in the Northwest Territories.

The superstitious Dog Ribs live in log huts and teepees with dirt floors, and there are only two flush toilets in the village, both in white establishments.

Men earn their livelihood by trapping and a good trapper can earn up to $3,000 a year from a free trader there who buys up to $40,000 worth of furs a year.

But much of the trapper's income is stready owed to the trading post for credit purchases of traps, groceries and equipment, and frequently the rest of the money disappears on a drinking sorce in nearby Yellowknife.

spree in nearby Yellowknife.

The Indian has been exposed to recent years to the white man's way of life but seems unable to adjust to what civilization has to offer.

The Dog Ribs are undergoing drastic change in their way of hie and seem to be looking for guidance from the white man who put the process in motion in the first place.

Trading post operator Arny Steinwand, formerly of Holden, Alta., said: "The Indians are in a transition period. A few years ago they were nomads living in tents, and they can't jump overnight into modern living."

Little hope is offered for the betterment of older members of the Dog Rib Band, but the youngsters attend public school at Rae and high school in Yellowknife. Recent legislation also allows them to attend university at government cost.

Most of the children, however, get just enough sampling of the white man's way of life while attending school that they do not want to return to their own vil-

There is no place for them in the cities, unless they are willing to hob-nob with skid row riff-raff, an Indian health official told this reporter.

He said the federal government probably will have to continue pouring millions of dollars into a bottomiess pit of social assistance and welfers.

ance and welfare.

Only hope for solution to the Indian problem, said the health official, is for a change of attitude by both whites and Indians—whites must accept the Indians socially, and Indians must show a willingness to accept the responsibilities which go with the white man's way of life.

Meanwhile, the Dog Ribs sup-

Meanwhile, the Dog Ribs supplement their meagre trapping incomes with old age pension cheques, family allowance cheques and welfare cheques.

They seem anything but hopeful of their future, and one woman who could not speak English wrote me a letter in the syllabic Dog Rib dialect which translated read:

"Lots of poor people here in Raë. Hard times, are very hard times. This writing in Indian. The boys, they don't know how to write, so that all for now." The Indians also still have their old superstitions to contend with, including Na-Gah, the hairy faced, giant bush man who kidnaps people if he catches them outside in the dark.

They believe they are descendants of a woman who married a-werewolf, who tried to kill her own young after they started turning into wolf pups during the full moon. Legend has it that the woman finally ran away from her husband and started the Dog Rib tribe.

Dog Rib children have always been told they would go blind if they watched one of their dogs give birth, although children watched women give birth inside the squalid log huts, said a young Indian who speaks English.

This rule was made probably because the Indians depend upon their dogs for pulling sleds during the winter months and did not want to risk having their halfwild animals become excited and kill their young, the Indian said,

While the probing fingers of civilization reach farther north, the Dog Rib people wait for their white brothers to tell them what to do next. They are puzzled. They are on an unfamiliar trail.

STAMP PACKET

With the coming of autumn, young collectors, and many older ones too, will resurrect their abandoned albums and scan the lists of summer issues that have been missed.

They will find a large and unusually interesting number of both new issues and overprints, for although this is "The Year of the Quiet Sun" it is certainly one of unleashed turmoil and change on earth, and stamps soon indicate these changes.

The Administration of Posts has announced that the Republic of Rwanda is overprinting stamps formerly is sued for Ruanda-trundi with the name "Republique Rwandaise" and surcharging them with new values. The old name and values are blocked out with silver and the new imprint is in black on the silver background. New values on the old designs are: 10c, 20c, 30c, buffalo; 40c, Colobus monkey; 50c, impala; 1F, gorilla; 2F, monkey; 3F and 4F, elephant; 5F, zebra; 7.50 F, impala; 8F, elephant; 10F, antelope; 20F, panther; 50F, lion.

It has been reported that the Crown Agents have ceased to handle Zanzibar stamps and that new definitives are being prepared at the Deutsche Wertpapier-duckerei. Leipzic, Germany, A set of four denominations in two designs was issued on July 7 to mark the Union of Tanganyika and Zanzibar.

The second installment of Togo's definitives were released on Aug. 22. There are five postage, two airmails and three postage dues, all featuring topical designs. An Olympic issue will be released in October. A set commemorating "Union and National Reconciliation." which was released early in August, portrays Togo's new president, Nicholas Grunitzky, for the first time, along with designs showing flowers, birds and butterflies. Values are 5, 25, 45 and 85F.

Australia issued a 6d definitive on Aug. 19 depicting the yellowtailed thornbill, to replace the present 6d banded anteater stamp.

The 5c commemorative released by the United States on Aug. 14 is original but somewhat gruesome. New York artist Douglas Goreline designed the vertical stamp which carries a three-quarter portrait of Shakespeare standing before the proscenium of an Elizabethan theatre. A quill pen is held in his right hand and near it lies the skull of "Poor Yorick."

The U.N. Postal Administration has announced that it will issue two stamps in denominations of 5c and 11c, on Sept. 21 to publicate efforts being made to control narcotics. The design by Kurt Plowitz of the U.S.A. shows three hands reaching towards an optum poppy but blocked by a barrier bearing the words "Control Narcotics" in English and "Eches Stupeficants" in the French version. They will be steel-engraved by the Canadian Bank Note Co., Ottawa.

A very attractive first day souvenir postcard bearing the Charlottetown commem. stamp was received recently from Charles Bentley, manager of Royal Trust in that city. It portrays early days in Charlottetown from the painting by Spencer Macky.

REMEMBER GRAINGER?

By JOHN SHAW

If Martin Allerdale Grainger had never accomplished anything else, he deserves to be remembered and honored for the great part he played in improving logging conditions in B.C. He was chiefly responsible for writing the Forest Act of 1912. His first-hand experience had shown him the over-staking, the over-lapping of leases, the speculation and graft, and above all, the waste "that sacked the woods."

ng lot ilfnd id, of When he was appointed secretary of the Royal Commission on Forestry in 1910, he was in a position to do something about the evils in the industry.

This was sufficient claim to fame.

But Grainger was a man of many parts. Among other things, he wrote. In 1908 he had printed a book of fiction, as he called it, titled Woodsmen of the West. It is probable that its characters were very real, and intimately known to the author. But in any event it is an extraordinarily vivid record-of the times, and particularly of the life of the logger, a very rugged breed.

This book, long out of print, so impressed Rupert Schleder a noted Canadian teacher, scholar and historical researcher, that he prevalled upon the publishing house of McClelland and Stewart Ltd., Toronto, to reprint Woodsmen of the West in the New Canadian Library series. It sells for $1.50.

No better glimpse of the author and his work could be found than in Schieder's own introduction to the new volume.

"By the end of the first page," he says as he commenced to read Grainger's story, "I was in Vancouver, waiking down old Cordova Street, with groups of woodsmen, looking at the spiked logging boots in Leckie's store window, lounging about, 'passing the hours of the days of their trip to town,' waiting for the time to 'comeanavadrink' at the Gold House, the Terminus, or the Columbia, and hanging about the wharf, watching the sailing of the north-bound Cassiar. As I continued to the end, gripped by the events of the narrative, and struck by the air of authenticity, I grew more and more curious about the unknown writer,"

In pursuit of Grainger, Schieder went to Cambridge and came to the west coast from his Toronto home. He found he was not altogether forgotten in either area. King's Collegeremembers him as one of the great Kingsmen of his time, and shortly after the Second World War founded a Grainger Studentship to honor him. He was the Exhibitioner, Prizeman and Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos at King's. And it was here, too, that the legends commenced to grow, his bump supper activities, the essay prize won with an article borrowed from Encyclopaedia Britannica, somewhat altered, and his plan to save the world with boxing organizations.

He quit Cambridge to hurry to the Klondike adventure, but was stranded in the Cassair, back packing for the Hudson's Bay Company in country too rough for horses, working in riverboats and hunting moose for Iood,

He was not accepted in Vancouver as a recruit for the South African War, so he worked his way to the scene of hostilities, enlisted in Lord Roberts' Horse. After the war he taught jujitsu in London, came back to the B.C. woods, did a little placer mining, and wrote for the newspapers.

These facts commence to show just what a colorful character was Grainger,

His book is just as colorful. It is well worth reading. But it is unlikely a this late date that the characters of whom he writes so cloquently ever will be identified.

Here Is a Handsome Canadian Volume

For Connoisseurs

By JOHN ROBSON

The War of 1812 is volume 4 in the Baxter Publishing Company's Our Canadian Heritage Series (a parallel to the American Heritage Series). The series, as the price indicates, is a labor of prestige.

Some years ago, a portly gent with a portable float waved his cigar to me as I swam past him at a summer resort.

"I wonder," he said, "what the poor people are doing today?"

A legitimate question, I thought, and I thought so again when I held this handsome volume, with its gold lettering on green, its luxuriously spaced print, and especially its thick pages, as creamy as vichysoise. This is a book for commonseurs of Canadians, and why not? My only regret is not having seen the earlier volumes.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE WAR OF 1812; Three Eyewitnesses' Accounts, ed. John Geliner (Baxter), $15.00.

The eyewitness accounts of the war are not military history but personal reminiscences, the first by a British private, the second by the 12-year-old son of a British officer, and the third by a Kentucky volunteer.

All are anecdotal, and are concerned with the day-to-day life of the narrator. There is no attempt to give an overall picture of the campaign, and indeed it is doubtful if any of the authors had much notion of the overall picture. In fact it might be suspected that the commanding officers were little better off so far as vision is concerned.

The various bands of soldiers seem to have spent a great deal of time making, very unpleasant marches in inclement weather from one fort to another. In the case of the American soldiers it was often from one unhealthy encampment to another.

One of my few complaints about the book arose from the difficulty of following the routes. As is proper, the map supplied on the end-papers is "A Map of the American Lakes and Adjoining Country, the present Seat of War between Great Britain and the United States. Done, in part, from a Sketch of the late Major-General Str Isaac Brock" (1813). But a modern counterpart with more place names could usefully have supplemented it.

John Gellner's editing is efficient and unobtrusive; his introduction is helpful and entertaining.

And I know something of what the poor people were doing in the War of 1812; they were showing courage and patriotism in grim and wretched conditions, and were (only on the American side, of course) following inept leaders.

From Land of the Midnight Sun

By JAMES K. NESBITT

The Yukoners are coming to Victoria Sept. 10, 11 and 12 for their glorious annual get-together, called the International Sourdough Reunion.

It will be quite a do, for Yukoners are as clannish as Scots, Once you've lived in the Yukon you never get over it, and you are as kin to anyone else who has ever lived in the Yukon, even if you've never heard of him; even though he may be 60 years older or 60 years younger; even if he has never been there at all, but if his father and mother were once in the Yukon, all is well. And you are as old buddies under the northern lights and the midnight sun.

And as long as you can quote Robert Service and recall "Soapy" Smith and say you've seen the ice break up in the spring you're

From all parts of the Pacific sourdoughs will come to Vic-ia for their reunion. Well, Yukoners and the Alaskans were in Victoria before, long, long ago, before they were Yukoners and Alaskans. Today's Yukoners and Alaskans. Today's Yukoners get together to celebrate the great gold rush of more than 60 years ago. And in that rush Victoria played a vital part. It was the setting off place for countless thousands who headed with exercise gold.

north seeking gold.

Victoria's history is wrapped up in gold. It was the rush to Cariboo in 1858 that gave Victoria its first great influx of population. In 1864 came the gold rush to Leechtown in the Sooke area, and this stimulated business; and then, in the 1890s came the rush to the Klondike which put Victoria on the map as an important centre, and local merchants waxed fat outfitting the miners.

There are Victorians today who recall those exciting days when rickely old steamers departed the Canadian Pacific Navigation Compan's dock at the foot of Fort Street. Crowds gathered to cheer the miners, and when the ships returned there were fantastic stories about the wealth on board. They were exciting years that gave Victoria a flavor that still

The Islander was one of the ships sailing between Victoria and Skagway. So great was the demand for accommodation that bunks were built into the fancy saloons and smoking rooms, and each ship was dangerously over-

The Colonist, in July of 1897 described a typical departure from this port: "This reminds me of the Carlboo days, said an old-timer... as he stood on the C.P.N. wharf gazing at the preparations for departure of the Islander. Now, when a real old-timer admits that anything comes up to the days of old, the days of gold, the days of Cariboo, it is the highest compliment he can "Certainly the scene was such as the ordinary resident of Vic-toria never before witnessed here. On the business streets were men in all kinds of outlandish attire; there was the old miner with his weatherbeaten countenance—the man in the startling array of bars and stripes of gorgeous hue that adorn the comfortable mackinaw coat and the self-conscious looking young man, just out of a business office, who tried to ap-pear at home in a nice sweater more fitted for the pleasure trip, and a pair of big boots that al-ready galled his tender shanks— he will have earned the name of tenderfoot.

'The burly form of ex-gover-nor McGraw of Washington, a big six-shooter belted outside his clothes, was seen marching about our streets before departure. is among the pilgrims on the search for gold. The gold seekers are from everywhere in North America—all have the fever, and have it strong."

on the trail. We simply strolled along, and actually did not know that we had come to the dreaded part of the pass until we were told we were over the summit. You can judge by this how ridiculous and exaggerated the accounts we have read of this journey.

"So easy was the trip that my wife and Mrs. Fall both declared that they had often felt the walk to Oak Bay and back more tiring, and really, the air is so exhibara ting that I myself did not feel the slightest fatigue; and the scenery is so interesting that if people only knew how insignifi-cant the trip is they would run up here for a day or two, just for the fun of it.

"Of course there are some nasty places to pack goods over, the road in some places being strewn with huge boulders, and how the horses get through it is impossible to imagine, until you actually see them picking their way through and over in the cleverest manner.

Mrs. Rattenbury christened the steamer Nova at Lake Bennett, and she and her husband made the maiden voyage down the Yukon for Dawson. Then Mr.

"He has been staying at the Dominion Hotel for a few days, and has now left for Nanaimo with his bride . . .

"The details of Mr. McNamee's courtship of the lady who is now his wife, his setting out for the dreary and inhospitable regions of the north in search of wealth, the months and years of unceasing labor and incessant hardship, his ultimate success after hope had almost died out, the accumulation of a fortune within a few months, and his homecoming to claim as his bride the one who, during his absence, had been true to her plighted troth, would make a romance worthy of treatment by a Hall Caine."

There was much wild talk about the fortunes made: "Pat Galvin and his big nugget were the centre of attraction on the steamer Rosalie . . . Mr. Galvin is steamer Rosalie . . Mr. Galvin is one of the Klondyke kings and his nugget is one of the famous lumps of virgin gold — worth by weight $385.

"Mr. C. W. Johnson of this city, one of the discoverers of Hunker Creek in the Klondyke, has reached home from the north, with, it is said, $80,000 in his poke.

"The wealthiest man on board was E. D. Ward, who is credited with having picked up between $125,000 and $150,000."

The north was shaken when a gangster was killed. The Colomist gave some details: "'Soapy' gave some details: "'Soapy' Smith the notorious confidence man, has made his last grand bluff. The gambler met his death at the hands of Frank H. Reid, city surveyor of the town of

Skagway,
"Smith, who was well under himself up to the proper pitch of desperation, got his Winchester . . . and started for the wharf where he had been informed there was a meeting in progress to take steps to bring him and his satellites to justice. As soon as Reid saw Smith coming he knew someone would get hurt."

Well, if this caused a sensation, there was even more of a sensation.

there was even more of a sensa-tion when Victorians, a few months later read this: "Even a dead highwayman possesses a pecuniary value in the eyes of those who eater to the seekers for new thrill. In proof of this, cours. C. E. Ven and Herbert Savage, who are now in Victoria, purpose leaving for the north by the next steamer, their mission being to obtain by purchase, or otherwise, the body of 'Soapy'

Smith.
"A Victoria doctor accompanies the two prime movers in the enterprise, to superintend the enbalming of the desperado's remains, and the plan is to exhibit the body in all the chief cities and towns of the west — more especially the property of the control towns of the west — more espe-cially throughout Colorado, Idaho and Montana, where 'Soapy' was decidedly well known, and not at all unpopular" all unpopular."

This macabre scheme did not materialize. Smith was buried in Skagway. A few days later Reid died from his gunshot wounds; and he was buried beside Jeffer-son Randolph Smith, in a grave marked: "He gave his life for the honor of Skagway."

Today "Soapy" Smith is Skagway's most famous citizen of the

SOURDOUGHS TO GATHER

A few days later the steamer Danube departed, and as usual the dock was filled with excitement and expectation: "There was one miner who seems to believe in traveling light, for everything he possessed was a box of biscuit, a box of tools, and his blankets. He evidently considers that there is a Providence watching over him specially, for he seemed perfectly satisfied that though others might pine for the fleshpots of Egypt and want to go home, that he would make out somehow.

Richardson with him in his outfit a fine case of instruments which his medical friends presented to him at the grand banquet on Saturday night. There were in all aboard the Danube 150 passengers, with over 100 horses, and besides that, ute a number of dogs, including Mr. Hulburt's buildogs, which formed perhaps one of the great curiosiof the contents of the

There were stories of the hard-ships to be endured, but one of Victoria's leading citizens, archi-tect F. M. Rattenbury, right in the midst of completing work on Parliament Buildings, which he designed, took a trip north. He lost his interest in architec-ture, left the buildings to his colleagues and got in on the gold rush as manager of the Bennett Lake and Klondyкe Navigation Company.

He walked over the famed White Pass (it was summer) and wrote to friends in Victoria: "Really, there are no difficulties Rattenbury came back to Victoria to see the Parliament Buildings completed.

There were stories of riches, and of the dance-hall girls in Dawson, and the gunmen, and the thrill of the north, but there were stories, too, of disappointments and food shortages and disease. In the fall of 1896 the steamer

Rosalie arrived here and there Rosalie arrived here and there were some gloomy souls aboard: "The Rosalie brings down from Skagway 11 passengers, five of whom are among the disheartened pilgrims who have given up the trainp in disgust, to try the trail again next spring, or content themselves henceforth with the more modest profits of their regular avocations

Victoria resident James Mc-Manus received a letter from Dawson, from his brother: "A young fellow left here in the last boat for outside with $25,000. He used to drive a dray in Victoria. Twenty five thousands dollars in Twenty-five thousands dollars is common enough luck here. Moose meat is 75 cents a pound, and some of it is as about as tough some of it is as about as tough as Dawson. It will take quite a sum to provide for the winter, as everything is so dear. We are charged one dollar for sending our letters out."

James McNamee was one of the earliest into the Yukon. He had gone there about 1894, long, before the rush had started in earnest.

In 1897 he arrived in Victoria and The Colonist had this to say: James McNamee arrived on the Islander with a reputed $200,000 in his poke, after three and a half years in the Yukon.
